Choosing the right CTA

A good call to action feels like a natural next step, not a demand. Choose one per post, based on what you want that post to achieve.

IF YOUR POST IS...	ASK FOR...	CATEGORY
A checklist, guide or reference	A save	Saves
An opinion or a question	A comment	Comments
Helpful for someone specific	A share	Shares
Part of a series or ongoing topic	A follow	Follows
A summary of something longer	A click	Website
About your offer	A visit or a message	Products
Offering a free resource	An email or a message	Leads
About connection and belonging	An introduction or a win	Community

Three rules

- One CTA per post. Several requests at once dilute every one of them.
- Only promise what you'll deliver. If you say "comment and I'll send it", reply to every comment.
- Say it your way. Adjust the wording so it sounds like you.

REFERENCE

Placeholder glossary

Some CTAs include fill-in fields. Replace them with your own details.

PLACEHOLDER	WHAT TO PUT THERE
[TOPIC]	The subject you post about.
[ACTIVITY]	Something your audience does.
[SITUATION]	A moment when your post becomes useful again.
[STAGE]	A point in your audience's journey — "ready to launch", "planning your first trip".
[FREQUENCY]	How often you post or send — "Tuesday", "week", "month".
[PROJECT]	Something you're building in public.
[LINK]	A web address. Remember: most platforms only allow clickable links in specific places.
[PRODUCT]	The name of your product.
[SERVICE]	The name of your service.
[DATE]	A real deadline.
[KEYWORD]	A single word people comment to receive something.
[RESOURCE]	A free guide, checklist, template or mini-course.
[COMMUNITY]	Your group, server, membership or forum.
[GOAL]	What your audience is working toward.

TIP

Rotate your CTAs. Using the same one on every post makes it easy to ignore — keep a short list of favorites for each goal and alternate between them.
